Concept note

While experts' opinions are significantly different regarding the remaining threat of COVID-19, everyone agrees that the pandemic has permanently changed the world around us from many different aspects and for many different sectors. As we work to shape our future and deal with many societal challenges, how can universities and European Universities alliances contribute to a European internal market for knowledge and maximize the impact of R&I in a (post?) pandemic world for a better, inclusive and sustainable future? In exploring the role that R&I can play, consideration needs to be given to the importance of strengthening cooperation throughout the entire knowledge square (Education-Research-Innovation-Business & Society) utilising a responsible research and Innovation framework that is fit for purpose.

Exploring synergies and facilitating best practice exchanges with other European Universities alliances who are addressing these same challenges will facilitate all HEIs to support innovative solutions for a greener and digital transition¹ paving the way out from the pandemic crisis in a sustainable and inclusive manner. Such sharing of knowledge also supports the values and current policy agenda of the new European Research Area Research and development personnel are at the heart of R&I systems and if the research process is undergoing change, becoming more collaborative and open, then we must look also at the current research assessment system so that researchers are assessed on the basis of appropriate criteria. Research assessment reform, such as that underway in the EU as well as being addressed through the transformational modules by many alliances, can contribute to the process of supporting the development of attractive and sustainable research careers in Europe maximising the possibility of supporting and retaining the best talent needed to design innovative solutions to societal challenges.

During the Forum we will address issues such as:

- What are the challenges in Research assessment reform, how is the EU approaching it and what can we learn from the work of the European Universities alliances?
- Sharing learning and discussion on how European University alliances can impact a sustainable future through a common R&I Agenda and the role that such a common agenda may play in achieving the European Green Deal and more broadly contributing to the implementation of the SDGs
- How can Universities and alliances better work with Enterprises and with citizens
- The importance of cross cutting principles such as Ethics, integrity, interdisciplinary, gendered innovation in responsible research and the challenges in developing common implementation approaches by alliances.

The first TORCH Open Forum will foster an in-depth discussion around these perspectives. The Annual Forum will be followed by a policy brief on the development of recommendations and roadmap for the progress of a common EU Research and Innovation Agenda with clear priorities and actions.

Participants

The TORCH Forum is addressed for all university leadership and for those actors engaged in R&I, university-industry-citizen collaboration. It is also relevant for policymakers, as the European Commission's perspective will be included.
